

FROM MEXICO.

Operations of the Guerrillas—Reported
Rupture Between Juarez and Dolindo
—A Juarez Convoy Robbed by Guerrillas—Uranga General-in-Chief, &c.

[We are indebted to a commercial house in this city for the following letter from its Mexican correspondent at Vera Cruz. The writer gives a gloomy picture of the condition of things in that wretched country, but he evidently writes in the French interest.]

VERA CRUZ, Sept. 27, 1863.

The last mail received here from the City of Mexico paints the state of affairs in the interior of the country colors. The whole country is ravaged by bands of guerrillas, who under pretense of patriotism commit acts of violence and robbery wherever they go, upon friends and foes indiscriminately, interrupting communications between the States, and plunging the whole population into excitement and fear.

Unfortunately for the Mexicans, Juarez seems to be unable to put a stop to this disorder. Power has evidently escaped from his hands, and he has to-day no more control over his soldiers than the man of the moon. A respectable firm of Vera Cruz, Messrs. Wilson & Levens, tell me that they have this morning received the important news that in consequence of serious differences between Juarez and Dolindo, the latter has left San Luis after a residence of eight days in that city. They tell me further, that Dolindo, the ablest man of the Liberal party, has given up his cause, and has gone back to his own State, though he does not intend to remain there. The suspicion is that he will go to the United States in a very short time.

The State which suffers most from the depredations of the guerrillas is Oaxaca, Juarez's native State. In that unfortunate region agriculture and commerce are not only taxed to the utmost, either in money or in produce, but when the Zeros or perquisition is raised, the guerrillas carry away the little that has been left, and set fire to the houses.

To give you an idea of the extent of their depredations and of the spirit of insubordination which prevails among these people, I will state that a company of two hundred men of Juarez's army, on the way from Guadalajara to Colima murdered their chief and several officers, and stole about one third of the conductas which carried a sum of $300,000.

This condition of affairs is not limited to soldiers alone. At Morelia, and in various points of the State of Michoacan, several officers of Juarez unable to secure an understanding come to blows. Half a dozen of them were killed in the conflict. Juarez himself is said to be abandoned by most of his friends, who, true to their Spanish character, leave the turbulent and threatened city of San Luis for the safer and pleasanter city of Mexico.

In several villages and cities of the districts of Morelia and Huasteca, the population, armed with pitchforks and scythes, have courageously come out in pursuit of the guerrillas, and after a desperate fight succeeded in driving them out of those districts.

Gen. Uranga is now General-in-Chief of all the forces under Juarez. But no one, except the French, can say what their forces are, nor where they are. A French officer tells me that the whole army of Juarez does not, at this moment, amount to 500 men of regular troops.

The great majority of the natives are ensuring the French for not having come soon enough to give them protection against the guerrillas. Gen. Forey says, in exclamation, that the rainy season has interfered with military operations in the interior, and promises the inhabitants to come soon to their rescue.

In a week from now the railroad between Vera Cruz and La Solidad will be thrown open to the public.

Local Politics.

UNION SENATORIAL CONVENTION.—The Vith District Senatorial Union Convention met on Saturday night, at the corner of Broadway and Twenty-third street, and nominated WILLIAM LADHEE, Jr., of the Eighth Ward for State Senator.

INDEPENDENT UNION ASSEMBLY CONVENTION.—The Independent Union Assembly Convention met on Saturday night, in the Vith District, and nominated CHAS. T. POLKES for Assemblyman.

FIFTEENTH ASSEMBLY DISTRICT.—TWENTY-FIRST WARD.—The Union Convention in this district met on Thursday evening and nominated Edward C. Johnson by acclamation. Mr. Johnson, upon being sent for, repeated the Convention and declined the nomination. Whereupon the Convention, by a unanimous vote, declared Mr. W. W. Niles their nominee. The Union Association in this ward, of which Thos. B. Astor is President, is now in a flourishing condition and have every hope to elect their Assemblyman.

Subsequently Mr. Niles was endorsed by the Independent Union men.

FIFTH SENATORIAL DISTRICT.—A meeting of the German Unionists of the Fifth Senatorial District was held on Saturday evening, at the corner of Allen and Houston streets, Mr. S. Menning presiding. Speeches were made by a number of the members, urging the claims of Mr. ANDREAS WILHELM for the position of Supervisor, and finding fault with the manner in which the German voters had been used in the distribution of offices in this city. A resolution was finally passed that the meeting adjourn and Mr. Wilhelm shall have been officially informed of his nomination, and that the Executive Committee shall then call a mass meeting.

T. C. CALICOR.
Brooklyn, Oct. 17, 1863.

Death of an Officer.

NEWARK, N. J., Saturday, Oct. 17, 1863. Brigade Major H. B. Olds of this city died last night of typhus fever.

Fire in Newark.

NEWARK, N. J., Saturday, Oct. 17, 1863. Seaving's Mill, on the corner of Warren and Main streets, was nearly destroyed by fire last night involving quite a serious loss of stock and buildings. Mainly insured in New York.

Arrival from the Gulf.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 18, 1863. The supply steamer Brunswick, from the West Gulf Blockading Squadron, arrived to-day. She left Pensacola on the 11th. Fever was prevalent along the shipping. She left Port Royal on the 13th. There was no news there. The Brunswick did not stop off Charleston.

Fire in Cincinnati.

CINCINNATI, Saturday, Oct. 17, 1863. The machine establishment of G. D. Winchell & Co. was destroyed by fire this morning. Loss about $30,000, insured for $6,000.

Railroad Accident.

BOSTON, Oct. 18, 1863. The mail train from New-York on the 17th, was delayed near London by a freight train on the track, and is not expected to arrive here until this evening.

Arrival of Cotton at Cairo—The Defeat of Richardson on the Tallahatchie—Death of Chalmers' Forces.

The steamers Omaha City and Belle have brought up 300 bales of cotton.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 17, 1863. I received your letter informing me that the Union Convention unanimously nominated me for Senator for the Vith District. While I regret that I was selected by the Convention for the office, I feel it my duty in times like these to accept any position where I can be of any service to my city, my country, my God and humanity. I accept the nomination.

M. R. GILSON ACCEPTS.

MR. WILLIAM PARKER, Chairman of the Union Senatorial Convention.

RESIDENT'S OFFICE, City and County of N. Y., NEW YORK, Oct. 15, 1863.

DEAR SIR: Permit me to tender my thanks through you, to the Union County Convention, for the offering testimonial of their confidence as expressed in a unanimous re-nomination for the important and honorable position of Register of the City and County of New-York.

While I appreciate the honor your Convention has conferred on me, I beg to assure you that I was at all times willing to stand aside for any candidate, who, in the opinion of my fellow-citizens, could have done to promote the success of the Union cause, and now, in accepting your nomination, I beg to assure you that, in accepting your friends' nomination, I can better serve the great cause in which we are engaged by retiring. I will cheerfully do so. I feel that this is no time for individual interests to stand in the way of the welfare of the country. It is the duty of every loyal and patriotic citizen to be willing to make sacrifices to sustain the National Administration in its efforts to save the country in this hour of trial, and I trust I shall not be found wanting in the performance of my duty.

Again, thanking you for the honor you have done me, I remain respectfully yours an obedient servant, JOHN KEYSER, To ELLIOT C. COWDY, esq., Chairman of the Union County Convention.

VERA CRUZ, Sept. 27, 1863.

The last mail received here from the City of Mexico paints the state of affairs in the interior of the country colors. The whole country is ravaged by bands of guerrillas, who under pretense of patriotism commit acts of violence and robbery wherever they go, upon friends and foes indiscriminately, interrupting communications between the States, and plunging the whole population into excitement and fear.

Unfortunately for the Mexicans, Juarez seems to be unable to put a stop to this disorder. Power has evidently escaped from his hands, and he has to-day no more control over his soldiers than the man of the moon.

A responsible firm of Vera Cruz, Messrs. Wilson & Levens, tell me that they have this morning received the important news that in consequence of serious differences between Juarez and Dolindo, the latter has left San Luis after a residence of eight days in that city. They tell me further, that Dolindo, the ablest man of the Liberal party, has given up his cause, and has gone back to his own State, though he does not intend to remain there. The suspicion is that he will go to the United States in a very short time.

The State which suffers most from the depredations of the guerrillas is Oaxaca, Juarez's native State. In that unfortunate region agriculture and commerce are not only taxed to the utmost, either in money or in produce, but when the Zeros or perquisition is raised, the guerrillas carry away the little that has been left, and set fire to the houses.

To give you an idea of the extent of their depredations and of the spirit of insubordination which prevails among these people, I will state that a company of two hundred men of Juarez's army, on the way from Guadalajara to Colima murdered their chief and several officers, and stole about one third of the conductas which carried a sum of $300,000.

This condition of affairs is not limited to soldiers alone. At Morelia, and in various points of the State of Michoacan, several officers of Juarez unable to secure an understanding come to blows. Half a dozen of them were killed in the conflict. Juarez himself is said to be abandoned by most of his friends, who, true to their Spanish character, leave the turbulent and threatened city of San Luis for the safer and pleasanter city of Mexico.

In several villages and cities of the districts of Morelia and Huasteca, the population, armed with pitchforks and scythes, have courageously come out in pursuit of the guerrillas, and after a desperate fight succeeded in driving them out of those districts.

Gen. Uranga is now General-in-Chief of all the forces under Juarez. But no one, except the French, can say what their forces are, nor where they are. A French officer tells me that the whole army of Juarez does not, at this moment, amount to 500 men of regular troops.

The great majority of the natives are ensuring the French for not having come soon enough to give them protection against the guerrillas. Gen. Forey says, in exclamation, that the rainy season has interfered with military operations in the interior, and promises the inhabitants to come soon to their rescue.

In a week from now the railroad between Vera Cruz and La Solidad will be thrown open to the public.

TO THE PEOPLE OF THE 17th ASSEMBLY DISTRICT, OF THE COUNTY OF NEW YORK.

WE are indebted to a commercial house in this city for the following letter from its Mexican correspondent at Vera Cruz. The writer gives a gloomy picture of the condition of things in that wretched country, but he evidently writes in the French interest.]

VERA CRUZ, Sept. 27, 1863.

The last mail received here from the City of Mexico paints the state of affairs in the interior of the country colors. The whole country is ravaged by bands of guerrillas, who under pretense of patriotism commit acts of violence and robbery wherever they go, upon friends and foes indiscriminately, interrupting communications between the States, and plunging the whole population into excitement and fear.

Unfortunately for the Mexicans, Juarez seems to be unable to put a stop to this disorder. Power has evidently escaped from his hands, and he has to-day no more control over his soldiers than the man of the moon.

A responsible firm of Vera Cruz, Messrs. Wilson & Levens, tell me that they have this morning received the important news that in consequence of serious differences between Juarez and Dolindo, the latter has left San Luis after a residence of eight days in that city. They tell me further, that Dolindo, the ablest man of the Liberal party, has given up his cause, and has gone back to his own State, though he does not intend to remain there. The suspicion is that he will go to the United States in a very short time.

The State which suffers most from the depredations of the guerrillas is Oaxaca, Juarez's native State. In that unfortunate region agriculture and commerce are not only taxed to the utmost, either in money or in produce, but when the Zeros or perquisition is raised, the guerrillas carry away the little that has been left, and set fire to the houses.

To give you an idea of the extent of their depredations and of the spirit of insubordination which prevails among these people, I will state that a company of two hundred men of Juarez's army, on the way from Guadalajara to Colima murdered their chief and several officers, and stole about one third of the conductas which carried a sum of $300,000.

This condition of affairs is not limited to soldiers alone. At Morelia, and in various points of the State of Michoacan, several officers of Juarez unable to secure an understanding come to blows. Half a dozen of them were killed in the conflict. Juarez himself is said to be abandoned by most of his friends, who, true to their Spanish character, leave the turbulent and threatened city of San Luis for the safer and pleasanter city of Mexico.

In several villages and cities of the districts of Morelia and Huasteca, the population, armed with pitchforks and scythes, have courageously come out in pursuit of the guerrillas, and after a desperate fight succeeded in driving them out of those districts.

Gen. Uranga is now General-in-Chief of all the forces under Juarez. But no one, except the French, can say what their forces are, nor where they are. A French officer tells me that the whole army of Juarez does not, at this moment, amount to 500 men of regular troops.

The great majority of the natives are ensuring the French for not having come soon enough to give them protection against the guerrillas. Gen. Forey says, in exclamation, that the rainy season has interfered with military operations in the interior, and promises the inhabitants to come soon to their rescue.

In a week from now the railroad between Vera Cruz and La Solidad will be thrown open to the public.

TO THE PEOPLE OF THE 17th ASSEMBLY DISTRICT, OF THE COUNTY OF NEW YORK.

WE are indebted to a commercial house in this city for the following letter from its Mexican correspondent at Vera Cruz. The writer gives a gloomy picture of the condition of things in that wretched country, but he evidently writes in the French interest.]

VERA CRUZ, Sept. 27, 1863.

The last mail received here from the City of Mexico paints the state of affairs in the interior of the country colors. The whole country is ravaged by bands of guerrillas, who under pretense of patriotism commit acts of violence and robbery wherever they go, upon friends and foes indiscriminately, interrupting communications between the States, and plunging the whole population into excitement and fear.

Unfortunately for the Mexicans, Juarez seems to be unable to put a stop to this disorder. Power has evidently escaped from his hands, and he has to-day no more control over his soldiers than the man of the moon.

A responsible firm of Vera Cruz, Messrs. Wilson & Levens, tell me that they have this morning received the important news that in consequence of serious differences between Juarez and Dolindo, the latter has left San Luis after a residence of eight days in that city. They tell me further, that Dolindo, the ablest man of the Liberal party, has given up his cause, and has gone back to his own State, though he does not intend to remain there. The suspicion is that he will go to the United States in a very short time.

The State which suffers most from the depredations of the guerrillas is Oaxaca, Juarez's native State. In that unfortunate region agriculture and commerce are not only taxed to the utmost, either in money or in produce, but when the Zeros or perquisition is raised, the guerrillas carry away the little that has been left, and set fire to the houses.

To give you an idea of the extent of their depredations and of the spirit of insubordination which prevails among these people, I will state that a company of two hundred men of Juarez's army, on the way from Guadalajara to Colima murdered their chief and several officers, and stole about one third of the conductas which carried a sum of $300,000.

This condition of affairs is not limited to soldiers alone. At Morelia, and in various points of the State of Michoacan, several officers of Juarez unable to secure an understanding come to blows. Half a dozen of them were killed in the conflict. Juarez himself is said to be abandoned by most of his friends, who, true to their Spanish character, leave the turbulent and threatened city of San Luis for the safer and pleasanter city of Mexico.

In several villages and cities of the districts of Morelia and Huasteca, the population, armed with pitchforks and scythes, have courageously come out in pursuit of the guerrillas, and after a desperate fight succeeded in driving them out of those districts.

Gen. Uranga is now General-in-Chief of all the forces under Juarez. But no one, except the French, can say what their forces are, nor where they are. A French officer tells me that the whole army of Juarez does not, at this moment, amount to 500 men of regular troops.

The great majority of the natives are ensuring the French for not having come soon enough to give them protection against the guerrillas. Gen. Forey says, in exclamation, that the rainy season has interfered with military operations in the interior, and promises the inhabitants to come soon to their rescue.

In a week from now the railroad between Vera Cruz and La Solidad will be thrown open to the public.

TO THE PEOPLE OF THE 17th ASSEMBLY DISTRICT, OF THE COUNTY OF NEW YORK.

WE are indebted to a commercial house in this city for the following letter from its Mexican correspondent at Vera Cruz. The writer gives a gloomy picture of the condition of things in that wretched country, but he evidently writes in the French interest.]

VERA CRUZ, Sept. 27, 1863.

The last mail received here from the City of Mexico paints the state of affairs in the interior of the country colors. The whole country is ravaged by bands of guerrillas, who under pretense of patriotism commit acts of violence and robbery wherever they go, upon friends and foes indiscriminately, interrupting communications between the States, and plunging the whole population into excitement and fear.

Unfortunately for the Mexicans, Juarez seems to be unable to put a stop to this disorder. Power has evidently escaped from his hands, and he has to-day no more control over his soldiers than the man of the moon.

A responsible firm of Vera Cruz, Messrs. Wilson & Levens, tell me that they have this morning received the important news that in consequence of serious differences between Juarez and Dolindo, the latter has left San Luis after a residence of eight days in that city. They tell me further, that Dolindo, the ablest man of the Liberal party, has given up his cause, and has gone back to his own State, though he does not intend to remain there. The suspicion is that he will go to the United States in a very short time.

The State which suffers most from the depredations of the guerrillas is Oaxaca, Juarez's native State. In that unfortunate region agriculture and commerce are not only taxed to the utmost, either in money or in produce, but when the Zeros or perquisition is raised, the guerrillas carry away the little that has been left, and set fire to the houses.

To give you an idea of the extent of their depredations and of the spirit of insubordination which prevails among these people, I will state that a company of two hundred men of Juarez's army, on the way from Guadalajara to Colima murdered their chief and several officers, and stole about one third of the conductas which carried a sum of $300,000.

This condition of affairs is not limited to soldiers alone. At Morelia, and in various points of the State of Michoacan, several officers of Juarez unable to secure an understanding come to blows. Half a dozen of them were killed in the conflict. Juarez himself is said to be abandoned by most of his friends, who, true to their Spanish character, leave